While visiting Montana, I heard a funny story about a Thai restaurant in Great Falls that I'm not sure is true or not so... nevermind. I haven't neglected 2cultures.com anymore than I've regrettfully neglected my other sites. A world of news may have flashed by in my absence but none seemed more exciting than your wedding and introduction (and ours) to life in California through your eyes and camera! [\[Read more ->\]](#)

A new marriage life.....

by Glitter85

Never once I picture myself living outside of Malaysia and here I am....living and currently fasting in San Francisco. I just came back from my 3rd appointment with myofascial release therapy. My body actually almost recover but last weekend we did whole house cleaning and it cause the pain come again. The cost for myofascial release therapy per an hour is $165. It's crazy expensive and my 4th appointment will be next week. I hope I recover faster. I'm lucky because Paul love me too much and willing to do anything to see me happy & healthy.

Happy Anniversary, Sayang!!!!

by Glitter85

My life in San Francisco is good. It feel weird when I called my parents and my relatives and they asked me "Are you happy?".

Salt Lake City, Utah

by Glitter85

We drive to Salt Lake City, Utah on March 29, 2010. It took 13 hours driving from San Francisco. Paul wanted to drive instead of flying because he wanted to show me the countryside.

That's the 1st time I see snow. The whole journey to Salt Lake City is like in the movie. We also went to Cowboy's city.

San Francisco

by Glitter85

I took almost 2 weeks to recover from jet lag + I was sick that time too. My 1st 3 days is crazy. I woke up, go out for breakfast and then, my head spinning after a couple of hours. Force me to go home and sleep. I sleep until the next morning. It was crazy moments. Now I know how Paul feel when he came to visit me 4 times.
